Still Lexie Lexie Miller Wyman 2018-01-15 In 1991, a 3/4-ton pickup running 50 mph broadsided my car. I was at the wheel; my toddler was strapped in his car seat behind me. My son's facial lacerations took over 100 stitches to close. I suffered a traumatic brain injury that left me with an unmistakable limp, terrible balance, wandering eyes and vision issues. Before my accident, I was an athlete. I earned many awards and accolades, accumulated twelve conference titles, and hold a college record set over 30 years ago. Though I lost nearly everything, lessons learned from sports lived in my subconscious, driving me forward when nothing else could. This is my story...I am still Lexie.

Providing for the People Robert J. Bigart 2020-08-13 The years between 1875 and 1910 saw a revolution in the economy of the Flathead Reservation, home to the Salish and Kootenai Indians. In 1875 the tribes had supported themselves through hunting—especially buffalo—and gathering. Thirty-five years later, cattle herds and farming were the foundation of their economy. Providing for the People tells the story of this transformation. Author Robert J. Bigart describes how the Salish and Kootenai tribes overcame daunting odds to maintain their independence and integrity through this dramatic transition—how, relying on their own initiatives and labor, they managed to adjust and adapt to a new political and economic order. Major changes in the Flathead Reservation economy were accompanied by the growing power of the Flathead Indian Agent. Tribal members neither sought nor desired the new order of things, but as Bigart makes clear, they never stopped fighting to maintain their economic independence and self-support. The tribes did not receive general rations and did not allow the government to take control of their food supply. Instead, most government aid was bartered in exchange for products used in running the agency. Providing for the People presents a deeply researched, finely detailed account of the economic and diplomatic strategies that distinguished the Flathead Reservation Indians at a time of overwhelming and complex challenges to Native American tribes and traditions.

2012-05-01 Evel Knievel, the father of extreme sports, was a high-flying daredevil. He was the personification of excitement and danger and showmanship, and represented a unique slice of American culture and patriotism. But behind the flash and the frenzy, who was this man in red, white, and blue? With characteristic flair and insight, Leigh Montville delves into Knievel's amazing place in pop culture, as well as his notorious dark side, exploring Knievel's complicated and often contradictory relationships with his image, the media, his own family, and his many demons. With this all-American saga, Montville has delivered another definitive biography of a one-of-a-kind sports legend.

babies born in the bowels of Sans Sanssabre in the early nineties? Also, whatever happened to Lance Evans, Sans Sanssabre's second in command? Was anything done with the property after the company went up in flames? "Take us there," Jaxton says while placing a jaw-dropping amount of money on the table. Christi is excited for no other reason than Jaxton is fine looking, about her age, and has his own Gulfstream. As far as Reba goes, she's not excited at all. It'd mean two things. First was that she'd be returning to where Smilodon still lives, the Sabre-Toothed Cats that at one time viewed Reba as their-putting one word to the description-queen. So what if there was Blackfeet in her family tree. That was five generations back. There was no way she was the Spirit of Knifetooth Running Cat that was coming to take back the Blackfeet land. Second, and almost as troubling, was that returning to that part of Montana could mean having to possibly interact with Matt

Shwartzberg again, the guy she lost to her best friend twelve years before. As the Gulfstream's wheels touch the runway in Kalispell, Montana, Reba tries to put all her apprehensions aside. What could possibly go wrong? Montana Horse Racing Brenda Wahler 2019-09-02 For centuries, on prairie grasslands, dusty streets and racing ovals, everyday Montanans participated in the sport of kings. More than a century after horses arrived in the region, Lewis and Clark's Nez Perce guides staged horse races at Traveler's Rest in 1806. In response to hazardous street races, the Montana legislature granted communities authority to ban "immoderate riding or driving." Helena led the way to respectable racing, with Madam Coady's fashion course hosting the first territorial fair in 1868. Soon, leading citizens like Marcus Daly built oval tracks and glitzy grandstands. By 1890, a horse named Bob Wade set a world record for a quarter mile in Butte, a mark training equipment for his team, and builds them up to championship caliber; to Waldport, Oregon, where the varsity squad is just fourteen boys strong and gearing up to take on one of the toughest teams in the conference; to Massillon, Ohio, where high school football is so important that the president of the booster club puts a tiny orange football into every baby boy's crib in the hospital. But the author also finds that the wins or losses on Friday nights are only part—and maybe not even the best part—of what makes the game so irresistible and so important to all those people who watch it, coach it, and play it. Night after night, all across America, the story uncovers the true heart and soul of high school football. Grandmother Maggie after the death of her mother, Louise and her younger sister have grown up into the harsh social and physical landscape of western Montana in the 1940s, where Native people endure boarding schools and life far from home. As she approaches adulthood, Louise hopes to create an independent life for herself and an improved future for her family—but three persistent men have other plans. Since childhood, Louise has been pursued by Baptiste Yellow Knife, feared not only for his rough-and-tumble ways, but also for the preternatural gifts of his bloodline. Baptiste's rival is his cousin, Charlie Kicking Woman: a man caught between worlds, torn between his duty as a tribal officer and his fascination with Louise. And then there is Harvey Stoner. The white real estate mogul can offer Louise her wildest dreams of freedom, but at what cost? As tensions mount, Louise finds herself trying to outrun the bitter clutches of winter and the will of powerful men, facing choices that will alter her life—and end another's—forever.
