There are 13 weeks so that you can plan for a fiscal quarter at a time. Each week starts out with a weekly planner for you to schedule activities, set your top priorities, and plan the to-do list of the week. There is a dot-grid journal page for you to make additional notes and plans followed by a daily sales planner and meeting planner (5 days/week). The daily sales planner pages allow you to: Plan your day's schedule by the hour Set your top 3 priorities for the day Track your customer call count for the day Track your customer visit count for the day Record new contacts Take notes on new opportunities Capture notes, takeaways for the day The back of each daily planner page allows you to plan out up to 3 customer meetings in Research your customer and know who you are meeting, what their role in the business is. Identify your primary objective and goal for the meeting - what do you want to accomplish? Draft questions in advance that you plan to ask. When you meet with the customer, use the planner to capture the customer's responses to your questions. Also, try to find out what the most important priority is for that customer. Record notes and takeaway actions. Be sure to check back on these follow-up actions and close them out to build up your customer's trust. At the end of your day or week, you can use the notes in your planner to debrief and update any other systems that you use like sales reports and CRM systems. That's it! We trust this planner will help you succeed in growing your sales and winning more than ever before.

Registries for Evaluating Patient Outcomes

Agency for Healthcare Research and

Quality/AHRQ 2014-04-01 This User's Guide is intended to support the design, implementation, analysis, interpretation, and quality evaluation of registries created to increase understanding of patient outcomes. For the purposes of this guide, a patient registry is an organized system that uses observational study methods to collect uniform data (clinical and other) to evaluate specified outcomes for a population defined by a particular disease, condition, or exposure, and that serves one or more predetermined scientific, clinical, or policy purposes. A registry database is a file (or files) derived from the registry. Although registries can serve many purposes, this guide focuses on registries created for one or more of the following purposes: to describe the natural history of disease, to determine clinical effectiveness or cost-effectiveness of health care products and services, to measure or monitor safety and harm, and/or to measure quality of care. Registries are classified according to how their populations are defined. For example, product registries include patients who have been exposed to biopharmaceutical products or medical devices. Health services registries consist of patients who have had a common procedure, clinical encounter, or hospitalization. Disease or condition registries are defined by patients having the same diagnosis, such as cystic fibrosis or heart failure. The User's Guide was created by researchers affiliated with AHRQ's Effective Health Care Program, particularly those who participated in AHRQ's DEcIDE (Developing Evidence to Inform Decisions About Effectiveness) program. Chapters were subject to multiple internal and external independent reviews.

Next, he reviews specific reports for financials, logistics, HR, asset management, and shows how to build reports that are readable, accurate, and timely. Finally, Curran introduces ActiveSheets, third-party software that streamlines reporting by working through Microsoft Excel. A working ActiveSheets demo is included on CD-ROM.
