From Three Feet Off the Ground Christie Havey Smith
2014 For Christie Havey Smith, her role as a mother is her greatest gift. But one significant day, tensions bring her to the floor, and the go-getter girl sees how she has misplaced pieces of herself in the midst of motherhood. Suddenly all she wants is to explore the possibility of 'being' instead of trying to 'be everything'. This is Christie's charismatic story of following her toddlers in a humbling yearlong lesson on how to see the world. It is the heart song of a mother making life-changing discoveries with a view from three feet off the ground. She sets out wanting to remember what it means to be amazed, be free, be attentive, be present and love without limits. What she experiences is the spiritual discovery of herself. "With boundless curiosity, courage, and a wide-open heart, Christie Havey Smith takes us on the adventure of motherhood. From Three Feet Off the Ground is a story rich with insights and luminous moments of wonder." --Lisa Fugard, Author of Skinner's Drift Proceedings of the Royal Society of Victoria Royal Society of Victoria (Melbourne, Vic.) 1903 List of members in each volume (except v. 6, new ser., v. 27).

Science And Human Behavior
B.F Skinner 2012-12-18 The psychology classic—a detailed study of scientific theories of human nature and the possible ways in which human behavior can be predicted and controlled—from one of the most influential behaviorists of the twentieth century and the author of Walden Two. “This is an important book, exceptionally well written, and logically consistent with the basic premise of the unitary nature of science. Many students of society and culture would take violent issue with most of the things that Skinner has to say, but even those who disagree most will find this a stimulating book.” —Samuel M. Strong, The American Journal of Sociology “This is a remarkable book—remarkable in that it presents a strong, consistent, and all but exhaustive case for a natural science of human behavior...It ought to be...valuable for those whose preferences lie with, as well as those whose preferences stand against, a behavioristic approach to human activity.” —Harry Prosch, Ethics

Humans relation to animals and our subsequent treatment of them has been a topic of debate for centuries. One significant part of animal studies considers how humans marked as Other have historically been degraded through their proposed linkage to animality. From ancient Greece to ancient Rome and the rise of Christianity, into the Renaissance and the formation of animal cruelty laws in Britain in the 19th century, animals rights, subjectivity, and welfare are consistently contested by philosophers. Are animals subjects or mere objects? Do animals have rights? Do animals exist within our moral sphere? If so, which animals do, or do they all? Do animals possess reason, language, consciousness, or sentience? What divides animals from humans, if exists any such divide? Why should we even begin to think about issues regarding animals when the sphere of humanity has so many pressing problems? What is intriguing in the debate surrounding human animal relations is that many of these questions continue to arise and are never fully quelled. While some ideas have been quite rampantly debunked, there are still many who utilize the same rhetorical strategies to attack animals and continue with their pervasive humanism. Also, those in power tend to employ similar tactics in their debasement of human Others, in particular women and people of color. Animal rights philosophers, such as Peter Singer and Tom Regan, argue that at least some animals are owed moral rights, and support the complete abolishment of industries that use animals bodies, such as the meat industry and the fur industry, as well as eliminating animal experimentation. Other theorists, including Jacques Derrida, Stacy Alaimo, Donna Haraway, and Cary Wolfe, approach the issue from a posthumanism, animal studies perspective. While the latter theorists are much more radical in their thinking, I will utilize primarily their approach to animals to further my argument that animals do have subjectivity, and that we ourselves are inherently animal. However, my primary aim is to propose a new reading strategy when analyzing Tsotsi by Athol Fugard (set during apartheid and the Group Areas Act of 1950) and Skinner Drift by Lisa Fugard (set primarily in post-apartheid South Africa, during the dawning of the New South Africa and the initial visits by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission). In this strategy, the consideration of animality versus humanity offers up new perspectives that transform the reading of texts that are focused on kinds of sexual and racial alterity. I have selected these two texts to employ this reading strategy with because of their engagement with forms of alterity that have much to benefit from this kind of analysis. None of the critical scholarship to date on either of these South African texts has extensively, or even remotely, addressed the topic of animals and/or posthumanism. The analysis of gender violence is also lacking, in particular with regards to Tsotsi. Perhaps part of the reason for the lack of scholarship in these areas is that there is not much research on these texts to begin with; both are lesser known works in the realm of South African literature. Skinner Drift is a more recent novel, and Athol Fugard, who wrote Tsotsi, is known primarily for his work as a playwright as compared with this one novel that he wrote. In addition, I would argue that the criticism tends to come from a blatantly humanistic perspective when approaching either text, as these texts are largely humanistic in themselves. From my initial readings of the novels, I was mostly struck by a few recurring motifs: the cultural construction of a masculine identity, the omnipresent physical and sexual violence, and the use of language to degrade both Africans and women. I realized that animals were also present in each of the two texts, as well as a process of animalization, and that this presence was bound up with each of the significant motifs that I recognized. I ultimately argue that the animal is the infra human and that the boundaries and categories that we have constructed between animals and humans are linked to our desire for mastery and superiority. I posit that we transform, and are transformed by, animals. However, it is vital to regard our differences as well as our similarities. If we focus only on similarities, we risk the anthropomorphic, humanistic label that animal rights philosophers have been charged with. We are both separate beings, and beings that are of each other. Also, if we focus on similarities, the histories of gendered and racial violence could be potentially legitimized by their perpetrators. Animalization is used to establish a link between women and animals, blacks and animals, or any person identified as Other. This us/them binary typically originates from the same apex of power. Issues regarding humans and animals can (and should) be tackled together, as we seek to undo the constructed hierarchies that precipitate mass violence and discrimination.

Glaciology Jeffrey Skinner 2013-10-02 "Once I walked a thin rail through a glacier" begins "Shattered Bio," the first poem in Glaciology, Jeffrey Skinner's latest collection of poetry. Filled with images that slide into one another in a dreamlike way, from the "squeak of pine trees in a forest" to "pinwheel, the baby's hand," the poem provides a precise way of seeing how layers of tenderness and danger melt into one another, inhabiting the same world. At the center of the book, the eighteen-part title poem "Glaciology" takes readers to the core of misunderstandings as it juxtaposes the work of a glaciologist with fractured language, misread cues, and a literalness that defies conventional explanation. The lives of the glaciers are reported with a careful, scientific language that keeps readers emotionally at bay from the effects of their demise, and the speaker comments, "I consider language / mistreated these days, asked to explain itself / to justify at the same time it bears / meaning, to own up / to creation at the moment of use / only, and only that meaning."

The third section of the book further explores the tensions of life and death in ways both whimsical—by focusing on a fly, a vintage clock, rabbits, and Poland, among other subjects—and deeply serious. In the long poem "Event Horizon," Skinner takes readers into an accident and its aftermath, which brushes too close to death. By the end of the book, however, a new focus comes into view with the birth of a grandchild in "All Things Move toward Disorder Except the Newly Created."

Blaustein's Kiss Judith

Felsenfeld 2013-12-05 In the eleven bold and tender stories that comprise Blaustein's Kiss , Judith Felsenfeld illuminates the complexities of multigenerational family life.

The impulse to connect is a major theme: a mother who has lost her rightful place in the family; parents ambitious for a child beyond reasonableness; a nursing home runaway and the woman who shields him; the ongoing pull of the immigrant experience as a family faces challenges to their lifelong myths and assumptions.

Throughout, narrative skill and fine eye for the minute detail shine through. This assured collection is linked occasionally by character, but always by Felsenfeld's spare, funny, generous voice. "Judith Felsenfeld has written a wonderful book of short stories. It is deeply serious but there are characters with a lively sense of humor who have imposed their will as well. Many readers will be cheered by her attention to more than one generation. A good, rich piece of work; a pleasure to read." -- Grace Paley "The richly detailed and moving stories in Blaustein's Kiss navigate the emotional landscape of family, and illuminate the human condition with heart-stopping precision. Felsenfeld's characters are confronted with tragedy, perplexed by circumstance, and her ability to inhabit the mysteries of their hidden lives is formidable. These heartbreaking stories are spliced with a sharp, uncompromising wit reminiscent of Grace Paley." -- Mary Otis, author of Yes, Yes, Cherries "In Blaustein's Kiss, her fine debut collection, Judith Felsenfeld's characters navigate their ways through many challenging mid-life moments--divorce, tangled family dynamics, elderly parents struggling with dementia. There are no easy answers for these women, but with grace and compassion and wit, Felsenfeld reveals their rueful acceptance, stolen moments of peace and also their defiance." --Lisa Fugard, author of Skinner's Drift About the author: Judith Felsenfeld's early years were spent at the piano. She performed as a soloist and chamber pianist, and later moved on into performing arts management and development. Commuting back and forth between New York and Fort Lauderdale in the early '90s to care for her ailing mother, she began writing short stories. Her work has appeared in numerous publications, including the Chicago Review and the Southwest Review. Her story, "The Lover," was broadcast nationwide on NPR's Selected Shorts series of readings. Judith and her husband, Carl, divide their time between New York City and the Hudson Valley, where she continues to write and plays chamber music.

beneath the earth of a South African farm. Skinner's Drift, lying amongst the sandstone rocks of the eastern borders of South Africa, beside the snaking bed of the Limpopo River, was Eva Van Rensburg's home. As a young girl she would range through its mopane trees at night, hunting jackals with her stammering father. But as soon as she grew up, Eva fled the farm and has not returned for more than ten years. Now, as her father lies dying in hospital with only his claustrophobic sister for company, Eva must go back to confront her family and remember the beauty, and the horror, of her life on Skinner's Drift.
